Abstract

We conduct a field experiment to evaluate the effect of extrinsic rewards, both financial and mon-financial, on the performance of agents occurring by a public health organisation to promote ERV poveration and self-condoms. In this setting: (I non-financial rewards are effective at imprecing performance; (ii) the effect of both rewards is stronger for pro-occially motivated agents; (iii) the effect of both rewards is stronger when their relative value is higher. The finding illustrate that entrinsic rewards can improve the performance of agents engaged in public series delivery, and that non-financial rewards can be effective in settings where the power of financial inventors in Euclide.

No margin, no mission? A Field experiment on incentives for public service delivery

We conduct a field experiment to evaluate the effect of extrinsic rewards, both financial and non-financial, on the performance of agents recruited by a public health organization to promote HIV prevention and sell condoms. In this setting: (i) non-financial rewards are effective at improving performance; (ii) the effect of both rewards is stronger for pro-socially motivated agents; (iii) the effect of both rewards is stronger when their relative value is higher. The findings illustrate that extrinsic rewards can improve the performance of agents engaged in public service delivery, and that non-financial rewards can be effective in settings where the power of financial incentives is limited.
