Webinar | Venezuelan Refugees and Migrants in Brazil: Challenges to Integration and Local Impacts

On September 22, IPA participated in the third webinar in the series, Building the Evidence on Forced Displacement: From Research to Policy Making, to discuss findings from the latest research on forced displacement. This webinar focused on the economic and social impact of Venezuelan refugees migrating to Brazil.

As of October 2020, there were 261,441 Venezuelan nationals living in Brazil, representing the largest share of Brazil's 1.3 million refugees and migrants population. While the economic gains of immigration are well documented in the literature, the evidence on the impacts of forced displacement is mixed and focused mainly on high-income countries. World Bank Young Fellow in Forced Displacement Mrittika Shamsuddin and coauthors investigate the short-run fiscal impact of Venezuelan refugees and migrants on the public expenditure and revenue of Roraima state and on labor market outcomes, including unemployment, employment, and earnings in the study Economic and Fiscal Impacts of Venezuelan Refugees and Migrants in Brazil. This study expands on a previous paper Integration of Venezuelan Refugees and Migrants in Brazil (blog and press release) that looked at Venezuelans' access to education, social protection programs, and labor market outcomes in Brazil. These novel studies help to understand the challenges faced by Venezuelan refugees and migrants and their impact on the local economy. They recommend the need for targeted and cross-cutting policies that take into account the unique challenges faced by both the most vulnerable local and displaced populations.
