

Article Link

<http://www.businessinsider.com/r-senegal-turns-to-sewage-in-bid-to-meet-renewab...>

Senegal turns to sewage in bid to meet renewable goals

For many residents, mechanized removal of waste, which costs more than double the price of manual emptying, is too expensive in a country where most people scrape by on less than $3 a day.

In one of the first projects of its kind in Africa, Senegal's government and charitable organizations are installing new toilets that turn waste into compost or break down matter with worms in a bid to lower health risks.

October 23, 2015